Hongkone, July 17rm, 1878. From a short article re-published elsewhere it will be seen that our London pink-hued contemporary the Globe has not much faith in the experiment of educating Chinese youths abroad. The article in question refers especially to the enterprise of His Excellency Your Wing, recently appointed one of the Chinese Ministers to Washington. Yung Wing, who has married an American lady, and is deeply imbued with Western and progressive ideas, has, after much labour and persuasion, succeeded in getting a number of Chinese lads sent to Hartford to be educated in the learning of the West, at the expense of the Government of Peking. The results of the experiment remain to be tested, but it seems to us that it is neither fair nor politic to anticipate failure, as our London contemporary does, simply because the European educated Bengalee Baboo has proved a disappointment. The Chinese are a different race to the Bengalees, and we have no right to conclude that they will turn out the same. It is certainly too often the case that Asiatics who receive European training are no improvement, either morally or intellecfually, on those of their countrymen who have not enjoyed such an advantage. But a great deal undoubtedly depends upon the preceptors and the method of instruction. The Chinese youth sent to the United States will not, we trust, come back ignorant of the learning of their own country. They will not benefit China if they return simply imbued with a mania for upsetting everything ancient and Chinese. They cannot safely at once castaside the customs of conturies or upset the traditions of their race. No European Power wishes to see China parting with all that is peculiarly distinctive of her nationality and making a bad copy of Western habits, customs, and institutions. What is desired by the real friend's of this venerable Empire is not that the costume of the people should be changed and their classics consigned to the lumberroom of the past, but that the administration should be reformed, the laws brought into harmony with modern civilisation; that the institution of polygamy should be discountenanced both by law and by practice; that the ferocious massacre of non-combatants. in war should be discontinued : that Government attention should be directed of communication should be established

Mr. Stanley save :--From the day we cross the watershed that divides the affluents of the Tanganika from the head waters of the Luama there is observed a general increase in the splendour of Nature. By slow degrees she exhibits to us, as we journey westward, her rarest beauties, her wealth, and all the profligacy of her vegetation. In the forests f Miketa and on the western slopes of the Gome mountains she scatters with liberal hand her luxuries of fruits, and along the banks of streams we sae revealed the wild profusion of her bounties. As we increase the distance from the Tan. ganika we find the land disposed in graceful lines and curves ridges heave up, separating valley from valley, hills lift their heads in thomidst of the basins, and mountain ranges, at greater distances has woven garlands of creepers, and the stems of trees she has draped with moss: and sterility she has banished from her domain. Yet Nature has not produced a soft, velvety smiling England in the midst of Africa. Far from it. She is here too robust and prolific. Her grasses are coarse, and wound like knives and needles; creepers and convolvuli are of cable thickness: find no pleasure in straving in search of wild flowers, and game is left undisturbed, because of path is left we find ourselves over head amongst thick, tough, unyielding, lacerating grass. The language of Swahili has words to paint her insufficient. In the former we have the word Pori for a forest, an ordinary thickly wooded tract, but for the forests of Manyema it has four special words, Moharo, Mwitu, Mtambani, and Maitn. For Moharo we might employ the words | earth, the current of the warm water will take jungly forest; for Mwitu, dense woods; but for Msitu and Mtambani we have no single equivalent, nor could we express their full meaning. without a series of epithets ending with 'tangled

which an ironeled man of-war as at present constructed runs of being herself destroyed in ramming another—or of being, at least, so seriously injured that she would be obliged to hauf out of action. Not long ago an aminent engineer expressed a decided opinion that the ramming structure of our men-of-war is weak, and pointed out that the stem of a ramming ship should be built up quite differently from the way in which it has been built hitherto. A strong, heavy lump of iron called a stem is, it was stated by the authority referred to, really a weak weapon, because it is not so made as to be in one with all the ship bekind our large single forgings, stopping short in thin iron sheets, are simply useless dead weight, and an oblique collision with an through Ituru and Iramba; and though my iron-plated ship will simply double the bow round losses in mon were great from famine, the fero- if not tear it open. The accounts of the injury suffered by the Konig Willishm, testify in a very striking manner to the correctness of the opinion thus expressed. When she entered Portsmouth harbour the Konig Wilhelm, we are told, drew 30 feet forward, or six feet more than her ordinary draught, owing to the inflow of water into her foremost compartment. The ram, it is added, is twisted to the port-side and all the plates are torn from the forcastle downwards. The rent made is described as being of such extent that it is strange how the ship kept affoat; while, the report concludes, it is quite clear that had any severe weather occurred and any straining of the foremost plates taken place the vessel could never have reached Portsmouth. Clearly, therefore, the König Wilhelm, although fitted with a spur, was not of suitable construction for employment as a ram, and it is to be feared that some of our own ironclads might prove equally weak if subjected to an equally severe test. In our more recently built ships more care has, it is true, been given to making the stem stout and strong but much has yet to be accomplished before perfection in colision construction is arrived at: and if men-of-

The Copenhagen correspondent of the Pale Mall Gazette, writing on the 1st June. says :-The well-known Swedish explorer, Professor Nordenskyöld, gave some details, in a lecture delivered a few days ago, of his projected tour round the north of Asia, to which attention was called at the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on the 27th of May. The expenses of of the exploration will be borne by the King of Sweden, who gives 20,000 crowns (about 2,000 The NEW "MARIE" BIB and CUPPS. guinens); by M. Oscao Dickson, who has boughtthe steamer Vega: and by the Siberian millionaire, M. Sibiriakoff, while the Swedish Government has given certain facilities for the manning and victualling of the expedition. The steamer the Vega, on board which the members of the expedition will embark, was bought for 150,000 crowns (£8,500), and was built in 1873 for whaling purposes; it measures 299 registered tons, The crew consists of twenty one volunteers. the most fervid tints. Nordenskyold to proceed along the north-western coast of the so called Taimurland as far as Cape Tschelynskin, where he expects to find open water on account of the immense quanties of warm water which the large rivers Ol and Yenisal discharge a quantity which is much larger than that discharged into the Mediterranean and the Black Sea by the rivers Danube, Po. At Cape Tschelyuskin Professor Nordenskyöld expects that on account of the rotation of the an easterly direction, which will leave open water far into the autumn-a supposition which appears to be borne out by records of the expeditions of Captain Prontschischeff in 1786, when with his wretched vessel he reached as far north as 77deg. 29min. or, as is now assertained, close to Cape. Tscholyuskin. It is then the intention of Professor Nordenskyöld to proceed along the coasts of Siberia until he reaches Behring's Straits, possibly, if the state of the ice permits, making some attempts to explore some of the islands to the north of Siberia, which have never yet been visited by any European ship, still less

EXTRACTS.

THE SWAN. All in a soft and allent dream A bright bird, on a dimpling stream. Floated through shoon and shade ! The blue wave from her snowy breast Fell swiftly, though, with wings at roat,

She searco an effort made: To me she seemed to glide along As easily as childhood's rong Whon summer skies are fair; For who could see the busy feet That 'neath the flowing waters bent With endless toil and care?

Somehow I mused on lefty life. That showed no trace of storm or strife, But swept seronely on,

Harmonious as the laws that guide The throbbing star, the awolling tide, While sunlight round it shone. But none can tell the anxious thought

By which that stately course was wrought Botween its banks of flowers; The sleepless watch, the secret pain That almost left the spirit slain. The weary working hours.

SHRIEVAL ELOQUENCE IN

INVERNESS. "Prisoner at the bar, it is my melanchol duty to fine you half-a-crown, and-may the Lord have mercy upon your soul." "Prisoner at the bar, it appears that you have received a useful education and a pious upbringing, instead of which you go about the country are found not guilty, but remember the eyes Carlyle himself. Does Sheriff Blair also an open in which there is absolutely nothing of this Court will be upon you, the eyes of keep a Sauerteig? The following looks as to excite enthusiasm, and, but for spectacubeen entirely cast into the shade by an inter-Inverness by Sheriff Substitute Blair of that i city, in the case of Fraser v. the Highander newspaper. This is, perhaps, the most eloquent. interlocutor of modern times, and, indeed, will compare favourably with many of those celebrated flights of oratory which have immortalised their authors, but which enjoyed the advantage of being free from interlocutory restrictions. If Sheriff Blair can do work like this in an interlocutor, what might be not do in a popular assembly with a popular subject? The composition, as a whole, could it have been remitted to a Select Committee of Cicero and Dr. Johnson to consider and report what in their oninion were the very finest and most majestic sentiments that could be uttered on the facts involved. It is true the conclusion is only for £50 of damages. Had it been a matter measurable by ten or twenty times the amount. the human imagination can hardly conceive the heights to which Blair's Rhetoric might have soared on the occasion.
